

Great Teams Don't Happen by Accident

In work as in life, you can accomplish more as a part of a team than you can by yourself. But, there is a big difference between working together and merely working in the same place. In this presentation, you'll learn practical ways to help draw people together to work toward common goals, and to share the mutual responsibility and accountability for accomplishing those goals.

From identifying the characteristics that make a great teammate and how to be one, to understanding and maximizing the five key human motivators, this approach to building a team will allow you to lead your team to produce greater results.

Even if you're not "the leader," these insights into human dynamics and interpersonal communication will help you be a catalyst for better workplace relationships, shared striving, and helping everyone "play well in the sand box."

By attending this presentation, participants will be able to:

- Identify the characteristics that make someone a great team member, and assess how well YOU exhibit those traits.
- Discover the common traits of great teams and how you can cultivate those within your organization.
- Learn five key human motivators, how to know which one drives each of your team members and/or teammates, and how to maximize them.

I needed to reconnect with the people I work with, and Randy's presentation was very helpful. It was great for reconnecting to coworkers (or should I say, TEAMMATES) and bringing everyone together to remember who we serve and what our purpose is.
